The Legend of Mackinac Island

There once was a world made only of water. A large and gentle turtle floated serenely on this water. His friends, loon, beaver, otter and muskrat surrounded him. While the others played and splashed in the beautiful blue water, Makinauk, the turtle, floated calm and steady any smiled as he watched his friends. And when they tired, he always gave them his broad back as a place of rest.

One day, the Great Spirit told the turtle that it was time to build a place for all the animals to rest upon. Makinauk told his friends that one of them must dive through the deep water to the rich soil below and bring back a handful to place on his back. That would be the beginning of the new world.

Each of the animals tried hard to dive but the water was too deep. Loon, beaver and otter each rose to the surface disappointed. Finally, muskrat, the smallest and weakest of all, said she would try. She took a great gulp of air and disappeared. She was gone for so long that her friends began to worry. Finally, with a great swoosh, she broke the surface and in her paws was a great handful of soil.

She threw it up on Makinauk's back. Magically, the soil grew and grew. Only then did the animals realize that their friend Makinauk was gone. But they saw his large round back in the shape of the island and heard his deep familiar voice roll through the rocks that line the shore. To honor their old friend, they called the beautiful new land Makinauk Island, the place of the great turtle's back.

The History of Mackinac Island

Mackinac Island has always been a summer place. Long before the white man arrived, Native Americans came to the Island to worship and offer sacrifice to their spirits. This was a sacred place, the home of the Great Spirit. As the Indians paddled their canoes toward the Island, its distinctive shape reminded them of a large turtle. They called it Michilimackinac, or "Great Turtle".

The first white man to set foot on Mackinac was also a spiritual man, a Jesuit priest named Father Jacques Marquette. He came to bring his Christian religion to the Indians. After spending one winter on the Island, he moved his small settlement to St. Ignace. A walled settlement, Fort Michilimackinac, was soon built on the shores of present day Mackinaw City and became home to French fur traders and English soldiers. In 1780, with local hostilities increasing, the English commander of the Fort, Patrick Sinclair, began to look for safer, higher grounds and found the perfect spot on Mackinac Island. During the winter, he moved the Fort and the village settlement across the ice to the Island.

He built a fort on top of the cliff with a commanding view of the straits and housed his soldiers inside. Down along the shore, the villagers, fur traders and their families created a new settlement that became the present day City of Mackinac Island.

Mackinac Island became the property of the United States at the end of the American Revolution. But the post was undermanned and the British, with the help of Native Americans, were able to maintain control of the Island, allowing them to control both the fur trade and the traffic on the Great Lakes. Finally, on July 11, 1796, the U.S. Flag was raised over Fort Mackinac.

But in 1812, before the American commandant, Porter Hanks was even aware that war had been declared, the British and their Native American allies crept through the night to the top of today's Fort Holmes, and in the morning ordered the Americans to surrender. Two years later, the Americans tried the same trick but were soundly defeated amid severe loss of life. The Americans were only able to regain the Fort by the treaty that ended the War of 1812.

All remained peaceful on the Island and the fur trade flourished. In the mid-1800s, as the fur trade faded, tourism began to replace it. In 1875 Mackinac Island was declared by the U.S. Congress as the second National Park, and the soldiers stationed at Fort Mackinac became the park custodians. In 1895, Fort Mackinac was given to the State of Michigan. Mackinac Island became Michigan's first state park.

Today it is the premier park in the state. The State of Michigan owns 85% of the island's 2200 acres, with 144 miles of road and trails visited by a million tourists annually. Fort Mackinac is now a living museum where visitors can learn about the long and interesting history of Mackinac.

STD TESTING & TREATMENT

Mackinac Island is a seasonal community with many new and returning workers every year, which increases the potential for sexually transmitted infections and diseases such as herpes, syphilis, gonorrhea, and more. People who contract STDs have a higher risk of contracting HIV in the future. This is because the same behaviors and circumstances that may put you at risk for getting an STD can also put you at risk for getting HIV.

What can you do to reduce the risk of getting STDs and HIV?

The only way to avoid STDs is to not have vaginal, anal, or oral sex. If you are sexually active, you can do the following things to lower your chances of getting STDs and HIV:

- Choose less risky sexual behaviors
- Use condoms consistently and correctly
- Reduce the number of people with whom you have sex
- Limit or eliminate drug or alcohol use before and during sex
- Have an honest and open talk with your healthcare provider and ask whether you should be tested for STDs and HIV
- Talk to your healthcare provider and find out if pre-exposure prophylaxis (PrEP) is an option for you to prevent HIV infection

LMAS District Health Department offers confidential STD screening, diagnosis and treatment free or at a low cost. Please call LMAS with questions or to make an appointment for STD testing:

Schoolcraft: (906) 341-6951, ext 102

For more information on sexually transmitted diseases, visit cdc.gov/std
